The origins are rooted in the game of football, the two can be traced back to the upper class French and English clubs of the late 19th century. An early standard-bearer for both France and England was Oxford University. As early as 1873, a club based at Clare College was called Surrey County. Rugby, the official name of this club, is still the official name of the sport. A year later a University club, Marist, was formed in Dublin, Ireland. Oxford and Marist played each other in their first matches on the cricket ground on Merton College Lawn in January 1874. The day was a great success and rugby enjoyed a rapid growth from then on. Famous players like Georgie Reynolds (Ireland, 1918-1923),
