If you wish to use Photoshop, make sure you have a copy of Photoshop CS6 or later. Photoshop CS6 or later is compatible with both Windows and OS X operating systems. Photoshop is available for both the computer and the iPad. The computer program offers several options for the user — either on a mobile device or on a computer. The iPad version of Photoshop CS6 for Retina displays is called Photoshop Touch. Photoshop Touch features the same photo and illustration editing tools used on a desktop computer. You can find out more about Photoshop Touch in the next section. Mac photo editing programs Perhaps the most well-known photo editing software package is Adobe Lightroom, although it is now available for all supported computer operating systems, not just for Macs. If you are used to editing your pictures using Lightroom, you should feel right at home when using Photoshop. You can easily import your photo images into Lightroom and use Lightroom as a bridge into Photoshop. Blender, a free video editor, offers many of the features of editing software that comes in less than $20 or less than $50. It's a nonlinear editor that supports open XML files. You can also use Blender with your timeline to build a video project. Blender is a pretty feature-rich package. If you're looking for a free package, this is a good one to try. Getting Started with Photoshop After you purchase Photoshop, you have a few options on how you want to use it, including from a disc or from the Adobe App Store (Application Store). When you open Photoshop, you are presented with the Default Photoshop Template, shown in Figure 2-1. You can customize this template, as well as turn on or off the taskbar of folders (which can be helpful when you have a lot of images open at once) and the application menu (which shows all the tools that Photoshop has to offer you). Figure 2-1: The Photoshop Default Template. The New Document dialog box is the basis for all documents created with Photoshop. This dialog box opens when you select the New Photo from the File menu. Although this New Document dialog box is very helpful for getting your first documents started, there are two drawbacks: • You have to guess at what resolution the image will be. If you have a better idea of your picture's final look, you can set the resolution in the New Document dialog box. Don

For most, it seems just a new match and a further step in the road to summer. But for the thousands of South Africans with sickle-cell anaemia, it is life and death. The disease, which affects millions of people across the world, and is usually treated in hospitals or special care units, is said to be 100 times more fatal in South Africa than in the rest of the world. The reason for this is little-known to the public and those who have it - it is predominantly caused by a single gene mutation. "My bones feel like they are trying to hurt me," says Steven, 22. "I wake up and can't get out of bed. I get really, really tired and have to take naps." He is one of thousands affected by sickle cell anaemia, which causes red blood cells to be misshapen and sickle-shaped. The disease causes painful periods, and if left untreated, it can lead to a shortened life expectancy. Steven says he has known he has the disease since he was a child. "I'm running all the time because I don't want to get stuck," he says, adding that going to school is difficult. "I'm having periods in class, but I can't help it. I get distracted and I end up missing most of the class." Steven says it is difficult to convince his family, friends and even teachers that he needs to stay at home and take it easy. "They tell me to just put on a brave face," he says. "I'm frustrated and I cry and scream sometimes. They don't understand." The disease tends to affect males more than females, but it is not clear why. "The unfortunate thing is, no one knows what causes the disease, so there is no cure. So far, the main treatment is painkillers, but these do not help. I often get headaches and the sickness gets worse," he says. Steven says he wants to help others living with the disease - he has even set up his own support group for people with the condition. "I want to make sure I stay strong so I can get through this," he says. Steven's parents have had him tested, but it is a rarity for the disease to be genetically tested. 'What does it mean?' For the last two years, Ned, now 22, has

Viewpoints: What's the World Travel Market For? David Bloom, CAI Global Business Traveler In light of the economic downturn, combined with the growing demands of the recession on the travel industry, it's important to consider how the World Travel Market is being perceived. Travelers are becoming more wary about the economy. They're also becoming more demanding when it comes to using their time. They want to see the world, but more importantly, they want to do it on their own terms. For the industry, it's about having the right product for the right traveler. World Travel Market The World Travel Market (WTM) is the leading strategic event for the travel industry to meet face-to-face, discuss what's driving the travel market and how the industry can drive opportunities in those markets and in emerging markets. The WTM is held three times a year in four cities: Barcelona in October, Moscow in April, Guangzhou in November, and London in November. Exhibitors from more than 120 countries join the world's best travel destinations together in one place at one time for two and a half days to talk, listen and plan. For the international travel industry, the WTM gives them a chance to network with the best and brightest from travel's largest players as well as top travel organizations and suppliers, and looks at the latest trends in emerging markets. For meeting planners it's a great opportunity to see what's happening in global meeting destinations and gain exposure to the best. As a meeting and incentive planner, WTM gives you the opportunity to find suppliers of business travel products in sectors such as: As a travel supplier, you can pick up the most popular travel products and solutions and learn how to market them better. At the WTM, meetings professionals can register to run demos to showcase their product and service, or attend the huge trade fair where they can meet buyers of travel products and services face-to-face. Although the WTM is primarily a meeting and incentives market, it also attracts more than 30,000 buyers, as well as many stakeholders from the travel industry in the four regions. As the world's leading global travel market, it can be an important sales tool. From the past The first World Travel Market was held in Sydney in January 2005.
